THE BREAKERS.

Walt came into the office of Mr. Haines, his employer, to get his O. K. on some advertising matter he had written the day before and had handed in for approval. Haines looked up at Walt's troubled face. "Sit down, Stedman," his employe said, closing the door. "I'm going to take an older and more experienced man's prerogative of butting into another man's private life. My excuse is that I think I can bring relief from a needless tension. May I go on?" Walt nodded.

"You've shown all the signs of ; man worried about the outcome of his marriage lately," Haines went on "Am I on the right track?" Again Walt nodded after hesitat-

'All right, then, I think I can help,' Haines said cheerfully. "Just as a man who's sailed over certain waters can be of help to the young captain who's starting out on his first voyage, I've been married twice."

Walt looked up gratefully. This was just the kind of talk he had been wishing to hear.

'The sea of matrimony is a pretty good way of putting it," Haines went on. "And you have just launched your little bark-you and the missus. Now, by that figure, your little craft is at present in the breakers. You two don't know it's the breakers. think you're on the high seas and that the whole voyage is going to be as rough and strenuous as it seems to be Well, it may or may not be. That lies deep down in yourselves and in fate. But the breakers aren't deep. They're just breakers, and if you push on you'll be in calmer waters in just a little while

You and the missus are finding it a little teetery, your craft, are you? You're keyed up. You think the spill is coming any minute. Well, it does to many a young married couple. But they're the ones who either mistake the breakers for the big deeps and jump back to shore or they're the unfortunates who're doomed to shipwreck from the start. Now I judge you pagni. two are not. Most marriages are not."

What the Electrolytic Method Is.

The tarnish which occurs on sil-dependent entirely upon the action of sulphur. In most cases the source of the sulphur causing tarnish is rub sulphur in the air due to burning illuminating gas and coal. The electrolytic cleaning method depends on the facts that this tarnish of silver sulphide is slightly soluble in the hot solution employed, and that it is broken down chemically and its silver content redeposited on the ware when the proper electrical conditions prevail. The presence of both the silver and the aluminum or zinc in the hot solution provides the necessary electrical conditions. Under this method, therefore, practically all the sil-

QUICK METHOD OF

The electrolytic method gives the cleaned silver a satiny finish after several cleanings. If a burnished surface is desired, the silver must from time to time be polished lightly with some abrasive polishing material such as powdered whiting. The study made the department specialists included a comparison of the amount of silver lost when the whole tarnish was removed by polishing and when the electrolytic method was used. It was found that when whiting paste was used as an abrasive, spoons lost near ly 0.01 of a gram of silver each, approximately twenty-five times as much as when the "handmade" electrolytic method was employed.
